Brief Overview of the Program

The Human Sciences International Undergraduate Degree Program sets out to cultivate self-motivated, reflective students who have a sophisticated knowledge base and the necessary practical skills to meet the challenges that they will face in our fast-changing, globalized world. The program aims to give students a well-defined area of disciplinary expertise that can be applied in a variety of settings to bring workable solutions to a variety of problems and issues. This exciting and innovative program was launched in October 2011 by the School of Human Sciences in collaboration with other schools, graduate schools, and research centers at Osaka University. The Autumn 2019 intake of students will have the opportunity to experience a re-designed program that builds on our own learning from delivering an English-medium undergraduate program in the Human Sciences these past seven years. We aim to provide a vibrant and multicultural learning environment for students. In addition to providing an English-medium teaching and learning environment, we also expect students to gain proficiency in the Japanese language. There are curricular, co-curricular, and extra-curricular opportunities to learn the language and interact with regular, Japanese language-based students, domestic and international.

From Autumn 2019 we are introducing a re-structured program. After taking shared foundation courses in the first three semesters, from the fourth semester students will begin to take advanced courses. At that time, we will invite students to choose one of three areas to focus their studies: Political and Global Studies, Diversity and Inclusion Studies, and Japan Studies. They will take advanced level courses to build their expertise in one of these areas of concentration and also focus their undergraduate dissertation in a related area of research. Please note that regardless of area chosen, the degree awarded at graduation is a Bachelor of Human Sciences.

• Political and Global Studies

Knowledge of politics and international relations is more important than ever in today's interconnected world. The Political and Global Studies concentration offers students a rigorous selection of courses covering domestic politics, international relations, and political economy. Examples of courses include Peace and Conflict Studies, East Asian Politics, Globalization, as well as courses on Japanese politics. Students will synthesize the knowledge they gain from advanced study into writing their 4th year undergraduate thesis. Overall, the Political and Global Studies concentration offers students a range of knowledge, training, and critical thinking skills appropriate for a politically or internationally focused career.

• Diversity and Inclusion Studies

This focus asks students to address issues of equality, participation and inclusion for people who are very differently located in society. Students will be expected to explore the question of what systems and practices are needed to create greater equality, participation, and inclusion across diverse settings such as education, health, and business. Examples of courses include: Human Rights; Health, Education and Inequality; Civil Society Movements; Sociology of Migration; and Gender and Development. Students focusing on Diversity and Inclusion Studies will gain skills and knowledge that will provide a good foundation for further study leading to a future career working in international organizations such as UNESCO, non-profit organizations, charities and corporate social responsibility sections, and human resource management in companies.

- Japan Studies

Economically, technologically, and culturally, Japan has a major impact on global society. Healthy living and a universal system of health care have helped Japan achieve the longest life expectancy in the world, yet this has come hand-in-hand with the challenge of hyper-aging. In a society that has ‘too-few-children’, demographics and how to better balance work and family life are major issues. The Japan Studies focus invites students to study Japan from a number of angles including its culture, social systems, and institutions, as well as its global influence. Examples of courses include: Contemporary Educational Issues in Japan, Social Stratification in Japan, Religion in Japanese Society, Popular Culture, and Japanese Law. Students who take this concentration will be well positioned to seek employment in Japanese organizations and Japan-related fields overseas.

Admission Policy

Osaka University welcomes applications from suitably qualified international students and domestic students with an international education background. The University recognizes the great academic and cultural value of having a diverse student body studying together in a community of learning. Osaka University is one of the leading teaching and research universities in Japan and it continues to attract highly talented applicants. This program allows for intensive study in relatively small groups.

The eligibility requirements described below reflect the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science, and Technology’s (MEXT) minimum level for submitting an application. Successful applicants will have an excellent academic record that shows they are highly motivated and engaged in learning. They will also be outstanding members of their school community and have a record of service. Given these expectations, we will be screening applicants not only on the basis of evidence of academic ability (exam scores etc.), but on their whole application. In other words, we consider each applicant holistically using all the information that is submitted to us.

Duration of Program (2019 cohort)

*For students who meet required academic criteria, accelerated graduation after 3.5 years is possible.

The Screening Process

Admissions decisions are based primarily on a comprehensive screening of submitted documentation (application form, your transcript, national standardized test result, English proficiency, a personal statement and two recommendation letters). We aim to gain a clear view of the applicant's academic achievement and potential, as well as their motivations and fit for the program. In this process we may need additional information or to clarify certain points. In such a case we would invite an applicant for an interview face-to-face at Osaka University or via an internet conferencing system.

The result of the screening (and the interview for interviewed applicants) will be announced by late March.

Successful applicants who have academic qualification in progress (e.g. IB and A-level) and received a conditional letter of acceptance must submit the examination results as soon as they are available. Failure to meet any condition may affect your admission status.

Expenses Involved in Enrollment and Study

In most cases, successful applicants will need to bear the following expenses relating to enrollment and study: enrollment fee, tuition, travel costs, accommodation (rent and utilities), daily living expenses, national health insurance costs and miscellaneous expenses. To hold your place at Osaka University, a successful applicant must pay an enrollment fee in June. See the Osaka University website and the JASSO website for further details.

Students can also apply for tuition waivers. Students may become eligible for additional sources of support after enrolling in the program.

Accommodation Support

Students on this program are given priority for places in the university dormitory for the first year. These accommodation expenses, while heavily subsidized, have to be covered by the student.

Handling of Personal Information

Personal information, such as names and addresses, provided in the application form and submission documents will only be used in the selection process or for evaluation of this process.
